THE ELEMENTALS: WANZU SETS SAIL

With powers connected to air, water, earth and fire – the Elementals are always on the look out for adventure! But curious and playful Wanzu hasn't learned what his power is yet...

Moana meets the Famous Five – The Elementals is perfect for readers in search of adventure!

After some time, Wanzu reached for his harp, which he had slung across his back. "Ah, I thought so," Jjajja said with a knowing smile. "Next time you are out on your raft, see what happens when you play a few tunes." Wanzu looked up at Jjajja. "Can I go sailing now and try?" he pleaded. "It's a bit too late today!" Jjajja laughed. "But you can go first thing in the morning."

wasn't quite as at least tomorrow at sea. "Thank for a big hug. his harp would aster. There was any one way to find out – and that would be tomorrow's adventure.

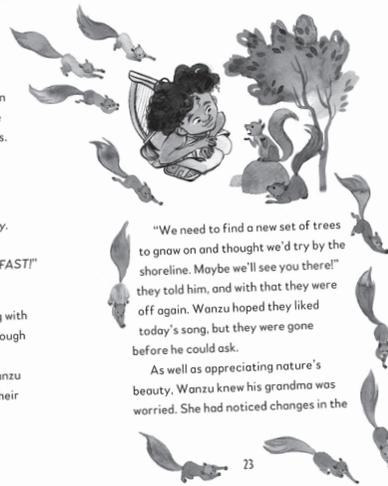

island. On any given day it could be a flock of birds, a gang of insects or even a herd of antelope. Wanzu would write a new song for each set of companions. And today was a squirrel day.

*"Not red, not even grey,
My squirrel friends are green today.
Not with envy and not like grass
They shine like emeralds and are oh so FAST!"*

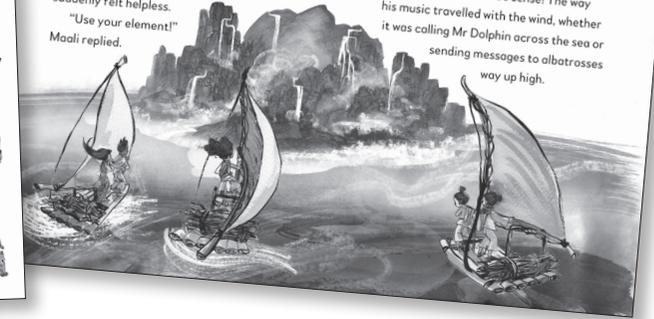

And with that, Wanzu was running with Sealand's famous green squirrels through the mini forest. "What are you doing today?" Wanzu asked, when they stopped to catch their breath.

"We need to find a new set of trees to gnaw on and thought we'd try by the shoreline. Maybe we'll see you there!" they told him, and with that they were off again. Wanzu hoped they liked today's song, but they were gone before he could ask. As well as appreciating nature's beauty, Wanzu knew his grandma was worried. She had noticed changes in the Wanzu took in the sad sight, then turned to his friends. "Let's head to shore!" After their smooth ride, the Near Sea was rough and scary. Maali was doing her best to control the waves but Wanzu could see she was worried. "How can I help?" he asked. Having led them so far, he suddenly felt helpless. "Use your element!" Maali replied.

"But you know I don't know my element yet..." Wanzu said sadly. Maali rolled her eyes. "You are the Heir to the Air – WANZU OF THE WINDS! Everyone's been telling you this the whole time!" Suddenly it all made sense! The way his music travelled with the wind, whether it was calling Mr Dolphin across the sea or sending messages to albatrosses way up high.
